Business Review. "You were all nominated by someone who truly respects your accomplishments took the time to ensure you would be considered among the strongest business leaders in New Hampshire."

"The nominees should be proud of their achievements," said Sharron McCarthy, publisher of McLean Communications, parent company of the

Jeff Feingold, editor of the Business Review, thanked the judges who had the difficult task of selecting the award recipients. "Once again our judges had many incredible nominees to consider. I think the stories of this year's nominees were some of the most poignant we've seen. Not only were they all successful business owners in their own right, but many conquered personal tragedies as well to emerge even stronger," he said.
